

ANDRÉS LOZANO

(ES, 1992)

Andrés Lozano is an artist and illustrator who lives and works in London. He holds a BA in Design from Complutense University of Madrid and a MA in Illustration and Visual Communication from Camberwell University of the Arts, London. Andrés is also the founder of Guts, originally a design publication turned now into an artist run collective that operates internationally creating street murals, site specific and organizing all sort of art related events. During his undergraduate studies, Andrés focused on illustration, building a portfolio with projects for clients such as The New York Times, Google, The Washington Post, Virgin Atlantic or McSweeney's. His recent practice looks at exploring the link between art, making and improvisation through a series of semi biographical paintings that materialize a world of apathetic and lonely characters surrounded by nature and interiors. Despite being strongly rooted in design and composition, as most of the ideas for his works come from ad-lib drawings, his paintings prioritize the process over the final result.
